Written by: Tron Anderson

Genre: Urban Drama

Log Line: Even though what we do is wrong, we have mouths to feed, so sometimes you gotta do a wrong to make things right.

Tense: Present

Plot Outlines: Freeway, also known as Marc Jacobs, is being released from prison after serving three years on a felony charge. While in prison he makes up his mind that he isn't going to remain trapped in the system. His plans are to live for his girl, his mother and two children. He's giving up a life of hustling in the crime and poverty stricken streets of North Philly, to obtain a nine-to-five so that he may provide a descent life for his family.

Meanwhile, his best friend Da'ud (played by Beanie Siegle), along with Shawn and Shorty, robs a bank on the way to pick Freeway up from prison, so that he doesn't have to come home with out any money.

After coming home, Freeway quickly finds that his situation is going to be harder than he thought. Do to the lack of income; he's stressed by his girl (Niyah), making him feel as though his manhood is being challenged. He wants to stay on the strait and narrow, but he knows he has to provide for his seeds, Hakim and Mecca, which isn't going so well.

Being a felon, his job options are few and even though he sucks up his pride and applies for several jobs he wouldn't normally be caught dead doing, he's turned down left and right and even embarrasses by a comical Dollar Land Store security guard.

At the same time, "B," leader of the Siegal Street Gang, and his henchmen, have set off a string of robberies, killing one of Freeways friends and ultimately killing Freeways best friend, Da'ud and his pregnant girlfriend Chey after breaking into their home to rob them. This causes Freeway to go back on his work and begin plotting the perfect retaliation.
